Lately I (0) B more and more interested in what my parents’ childhood was like. Their backgrounds (1) were very different because my Dad grew up in the city while my Mom (2) was raised by her grandparents on their farm. I (3) was asking them a lot of questions and trying to write down everything they (4) had told me up to now. By next week, I (5) will have typed stories for only two months yet by the end of this month, I (6) will have typed over twenty pages! Right now I (7) am writing a small part of one of my Mom’s stories. Since I (8) was writing things down, I thought I (9) had been writing most of my Mom’s best memories before she (10) told me this one. She was about five or six and smart for her age. She went downstairs to talk to her Uncle, who (11) had been working in the cellar since lunch and was quite tired. He (12) had chewed gum when she saw him, and she (13) wanted some. Back then, (late 1930’s) gum was hard to find and a little expensive, so he (14) had refused her. At this response, she thought, “I (15) will get some gum!” When her uncle (16) saw the look on her face, he knew she (17) was going to do something. A second later, she (18) was shutting the cellar door with him inside. Then she took a piece of gum from the pack he left on the stairs and went back up to the kitchen, leaving him banging on the door and yelling for someone to let him out. Many good stories (19) are told by story tellers, but I believe true stories like childhood memories are the best. I hope someday someone (20) will find mine interesting enough to write down, too.
